

	Partnership School	Open-Door School	Come-If-We-Call School	Fortress School
Description	All families and communities have something great to offer – we do whatever it takes to work closely to make sure every single student succeeds.	Parents can be involved at our school in many ways – we’re working hard to get an even bigger turnout for our activities. When we ask the community to help, people often respond.	Parents are welcome when we ask them, but there’s only so much they can offer. The most important thing they can do is help their kids at home. We know where to get help in the community if we need it.	Parents belong at home, not at school. If students don’t do well, it’s because their families don’t give them enough support. We’re already doing all we can. Our school is an oasis in a troubled community. We want to keep it that way.
Building Relationships	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Family center is always open, full of interesting learning materials to borrow. Home visits are made to every new family Activities honor families’ contributions Building is open to community use and social services are available to families 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Teachers contact families once a year Parent coordinator is available if families have questions or need help Office staff are friendly Staff contact community agencies and organizations when help is needed 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Better-educated parents are more involved “Many immigrant parents don’t have time to come or contribute” Staff are very selective about who comes into the school 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Families do not “bother” school staff “Minority families don’t value education” Parents need security clearance to come in It is important to keep community influences out of the school
Linking To Learning	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> All family activities connect to what students are learning Parents and teachers look at student work and test results together Community groups offer tutoring and homework programs at the school Students’ work goes home every week, with a scoring guide 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Teachers explain test scores if asked Folders of student work go home occasionally School holds curriculum nights three or four times a year Staff let families know about out-of-school classes in the community 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Parents are told what students will be learning at the fall open house Parents can call the office to get teacher-recorded messages about homework Workshops are offered on parenting 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Curriculum and standards are considered too complex for parents to understand “If parents want more information, they can ask for it” “We’re teachers, not social workers”
Addressing Differences	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Translators are readily available Teachers use books and materials about families’ cultures Parent groups include all families Local groups help staff reach parents 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Office staff will find a translator if parents ask in advance Multicultural nights are held once a year “Minority” parents have their own group 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> “We can’t deal with twenty different languages” “Parents can bring a translator with them” “This school just isn’t the same as it used to be” 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> “Those parents need to learn English” “We teach about our country – that’s what those parents need to know” “This neighborhood is going downhill”
Supporting Advocacy	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> There is a clear, open process for resolving problems Teachers contact families each month to discuss student progress Student-led parent-teacher conferences help three times a year for thirty minutes 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Principal will meet with parents to discuss a problem Regular progress reports go to parents’ but test data can be hard to understand Parent-teacher conferences are held twice a year 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> School calls families when children have problems Families visit school on report card pickup day and can see a teacher if they call first 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Parents don’t come to conferences Problems are dealt with by the professional staff Teachers don’t feel safe with parents
Sharing Power	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Parents and teachers research issues such as prejudice and tracking Parent group is focused on improving student achievement Families are involved in all major decisions Parents can use the school’s phone, copier, fax, and computers Staff work with local organizers to improve the school and neighborhood 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Parents can raise issues at PTA meetings or see the principal Parent group sets its own agenda and raises money for the school Resource center for low-income families is housed in a portable classroom next to the school PTA officers can use the school office A community representative sits on the school council 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Principal sets agenda for parent meetings Parent groups get the school’s message out “Parents are not experts in education” Community groups can address the school board if they have concerns 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Principal picks a small group of “cooperative parents” to help out Families are afraid to complain: “They might take it out on my kid” “Community groups should mind their own business; they don’t know about education”