

Towles Elementary School Staff and Parent Surveys
Washoe County School District Parent Involvement Council
Evaluation Brief July 2008

Background

To learn more about how to strengthen partnerships between the district, individual schools, and parents, the Washoe County School District’s (WCSD) Parent Involvement Council (PIC) conducted a district-wide needs assessment. The PIC is comprised of parents, school district administrative, certified and classified employees, and business representatives. The needs assessment included three components: an online administrator survey, an online teacher and staff survey, and a parent survey administered through the mail. This evaluation brief will highlight the results from Towles Elementary School’s staff and parent surveys. Throughout the brief, percentages reported are based on the number of respondents who answered the item, which may be less than the total number of survey respondents.

Staff Survey

- 5 respondents; 60% certified and 40% classified; 15% response rate.
- 100% felt their school was “good” or “excellent” at making parents feel welcome.
- 100% thought they would benefit from professional development specific to PI “a little.”
- 67% reported that in professional learning community meetings PI was talked about as a strategy for improving student academic achievement “frequently” or “very frequently.”
- 100% believed others at their school thought PI was “important” or “extremely important.”
- 60% would place a “high priority” on increasing PI in their school.
- 60% thought PI makes a “major contribution” to a child’s academic success.

Standards of Parent Involvement

School staff were asked to rate how well the school is doing with respect to the six well-established standards of parent involvement (PI). The items were combined to create a mean rating for each of the six standards. The response scale on these items were 1=poor, 2=fair, 3=good, and 4=excellent.

The bar graph to the right compares Towles’s staff ratings to those of all WCSD elementary staff who completed the survey. Towles’s mean ratings ranged from 2.5 to 3.5. The highest mean rating was in the area of volunteering, while the lowest was related to parenting.

As part of the survey development process, parents outside of the PIC were also consulted for feedback and suggestions. The survey was mailed to 338 Towles Elementary School parents, and 77 were returned, yielding a response rate of 23%. The top three ways that parents got most of their information about school were from their child's folder (30%), when their child told them (18%) and flyers from the school (16%).

Opinions about Parent Involvement

Parent respondents indicated their level of agreement with 12 statements about parent involvement at their child's school (see bar graph on the page to the right). Responses could range from 1=strongly disagree to 5=strongly agree. The level of agreement was fairly high ranging between a mean of 3.3 to 4.1. The lowest level of agreement was on the item "my child's school wants to hear my ideas about how to make the school better." The highest level of agreement was for the item "in addition to report cards, this school tells me about my child's learning and grades."

Comparisons of English-speaking and Spanish-speaking parents' responses

- English-speaking parents were more likely to have volunteered at their child's school (69%) than Spanish-speaking parents (36%).
- Spanish-speaking parents who had never volunteered at their child's school were more likely to want to do so (86%) than English-speaking parents (42%).
- Spanish-speaking parents were more likely than English-speaking parents to agree that "my child's school makes sure I know what report card grades mean;" "this school will help me assist my child with homework and learning;" "students at my child's school are treated fairly by all teachers and staff no matter what their race, cultural or family background;" and, "overall, I am satisfied with the communication between this school and me."

Comparisons of white and non-white parents' responses

- White parents had attended more school events than non-white parents in the past year.
- White parents were more likely to have volunteered at their child's school (75%) than non-white parents (42%).
- Non-white parents were more likely than white parents to agree that "in addition to report cards, this school tells me about my child's learning and grades;" "this school will help me assist my child with homework and learning;" and, "students at my child's school are treated fairly by all teachers and staff no matter what their race, cultural or family background."

Conclusions and Recommendations

School staff respondents rated communication and student learning at home as top areas of parent involvement at Towles Elementary School. Parent results suggest that communication between the school and the family could be stronger and that the school could better assist parents with student learning at home. Additionally, results from both the school staff and parent surveys suggest that school decision making is an area in which Towles Elementary School could strengthen parent involvement.

As parent involvement is a viable and necessary strategy for student achievement, a general recommendation is to reallocate school site funding to support systemic implementation of parent involvement. Another recommendation is to provide all school staff with appropriate professional development on how to effectively engage parents in their children's education. Schools also should help parents understand academic standards, state and district assessments, how to monitor a child's progress and work with educators to improve the achievement of their children. A variety of strategies to improve parent involvement are highlighted below.

Strategies to Improve Parent Involvement

General

- Reallocate school site funding to support systemic implementation of parent involvement. Example: Pay teachers overtime for working with parents at school wide meetings from the school general fund budget.
- Provide appropriate professional development to all school staff on how to effectively engage parents in their children's education. Example, customer service training for education support professionals; training for teachers in how to reach out to, communicate with, and work with parents as equal partners.

Student Learning at Home

- Provide information and ideas to the family to increase family participation in setting student goals each year and in planning for college or work.
- Provide information for families on skills required for students in all subjects at each grade.

School Decision Making

- Create networks to link all families with parent representatives.

Communication

- Provide families with weekly and/or monthly folders of student work for review and comments.
- Provide clear information on all school policies, programs, reforms, and transitions.
